She sweetly sleeps beneath the sod, Her voice we'll hear no more; For she is happy with her God, Her trials all are o'er.

We'll miss her in the house of prayer, And in our times of grief. For out her voice will not be there To whilsper sweet relief. We weep, and yet we would not bring Our loved friend back to earth, E'en though the grief forever fling A shadow o'er our bearth. We weep; kind nature bids these tears To flow and ease our pain, But though we weep, we know our loss is her eternal gain.

For she is pure and happy now, is decked in robes of white, A diadem upon her brow, She dwells in Jesus' sight, In fancy oft we'll see her face And hear her gentle voice, And if we trust in saving grace And make her God our choice,

We know reall meet beyond the grave Where partings ne'er are known, And sing the authem of the saved In our eternal Home. E. A. Semmery, May 6th, 1873.
